- You must be kind! Respect and try to understand children and young people and their lived experience. Take their concerns and worries seriously.
- You must ask clear questions, actively listen to children and young people's answers, and explain any actions you will take.
- You demonstrate that you're worthy of trust by doing what you say you will.
- You are open-minded and fair. You don't jump to conclusions or judge.
- You recognise that all children and young people are individuals. The person in front of you will need a personalised approach and supports.
- You trust that the child or young person in front of you knows themselves. You ask for and listen to their views, and you don't patronise them.
- You treat children and young people as your equal and talk directly to them.
- You offer realistic, helpful advice.

Skills and Experience

- You understand that we all have emotions, thoughts and behaviours that affect our mental health, and that is perfectly normal.
- You recognise that individuals aren't defined by just one aspect of their life or experiences.
- You want to learn about issues that affect children and young people's lives (including their experiences of gender, sexuality, disability, race, and care). You consider the ways these experiences might impact wellbeing and mental health.
- You understand the difference that positive relationships can make.
- You want to be a trusted, reliable adult for children and young people, no matter what your job is.
